Middle Class and Democracy in Latin America

Por: Fierro, J (Fierro, Jaime)[1,2,3,4]

PERFILES LATINOAMERICANOS
Volumen: 23
Número: 46
Páginas: 37-60
Fecha de publicación: JUL-DEC 2015
Ver información de revista

Resumen

The consolidation of the middle class has been interpreted by modernization and post-modernization theories as a key factor for the functioning and stability of the democratic system. However, in Latin America the middle class has tended to be associated with two contradictory positions. On the one hand, it is emphasized that it plays a stabilizing and democratic role while, on the other hand, it is linked to supporting military coups. With the purpose of elucidate such a dilemma, the relationship that can be established between the socioeconomic status and the degree of support for democracy will be examined. In order to do this, an empirical analysis from Latinbarometer surveys databases will be conducted, covering seventeen countries in the region for the period from 1996 to 2011. It will be concluded that the middle class in Latin America does not have particularly more favorable attitudes toward democracy than other social segments.

Palabras clave

Palabras clave de autor: middle class; democracy; modernization; post-modernization; Latin America; Latinbarometer

Información del autor

Dirección para petición de copias: Fierro, J (autor para petición de copias)

Direcciones:

[ 2 ] Univ Chile, Filosofía Menc Filosofía Moral & Polit, Santiago, Chile
[ 3 ] Univ Chile, Ciencias Sociales & Sociol, Santiago, Chile
[ 4 ] Univ Chile, Inst Asuntos Publ INAP, Santiago, Chile

Editorial

FLACSO-MEXICO, CARRETERA AL AJUSCO 377, COLONIA HEROES DE PADERNA, DELEGACION TLALPAN, MEXICO CITY DF, CP 14200, MEXICO

Categorías / Clasificación

Áreas de investigación: Social Sciences - Other Topics
Categorías de Web of Science: Social Sciences, Interdisciplinary