

Social perceptions on genomics in four Latin American countries. Ethical-legal implications
Percepciones sociales sobre genómica en cuatro países latinoamericanos. Implicaciones etico legales.

Rodríguez Yunta, Eduardo

Valdebenito Herrera, Carolina

Misseroni, Adelio

Fernández Milla, Lautaro

Outomuro, Delia

Schiattino Lemus, Irene

Lolas Stepke, Fernando

The authors analyze under an ethical and legal perspective the consequences and anxieties generated by the human genome project in the population of four Latin American countries: Argentine, Chile, México and Perú, through bibliographical analysis and interviews done to biomedical researches, lawyers and legislators, students and lay civilians.